THE - Diary of a 49'er

FROM THE BOOK EDITED BY C. L. CANFIELD

JULY 13, 1851—It was Pard who got a surprise this week. We had a special invitation to come over to Selby Flat Wednesday night and, although Pard did not want to go, a delegation came over for us and we could not very well refuse. We did not know what was up and they would not let on, but when we got there we found a crowd of about a hundred miners gathered at the hotel. Of course, it was drinks all around; you can't do anything in this country without setting 'em up first, and then Henry Shively made a talk. Said that the miners of Brush and Rock Creeks and the residents of Selby Flats were proud of the fact that they had a man among them who, as an orator, laid over anything that the town of Nevada could produce as was demonstrated by his Fourth of July speech and that the Nevada City lawyers were not to be mentioned in the same class as Anderson. Then he produced a big gold watch that weighed about a pound and presented it to Pard as a token of the boys' appreciation. Pard was so taken back that for a while he couldn't speak, but he finally caught on and gave them a nice talk. Then he set up the drinks again and we left for the cabin. When we got there we looked over the watch by candle light; it certainly was a stunner and must have cost three or four hundred dollars. There was an inscription:

"Presented to L. T. Anderson, July Fourth, 1851, by his admiring friends and miners of

Just Wonderin'

I Wonder about titles now
And those who proudly wear them,
And those dear democratic souls
Who simply cannot bear them;
Some titles are inherited
And some are nobly won,
Some speak of dim ancestral fame
And some deeds well done.

If Shakespeare were alive today, he might find material for another play, titled, Much Ado About Nothing, in a recent social episode of no importance whatever. A social leader living in an eastern city gave a party. Among her guests, were a Countess and a young person of sternly democratic tendencies.

The young person refused to recognize the ancestral title, the Countess was affronted and the hostess greatly distressed; indeed there was a tempest in a teapot and the case was taken to a radio court of appeals. Just three empty headed women who were not content until they had given their empty headedness nation wide publicity.

The young person should have been taken aside by an older and wiser soul and instructed in the art of social rage; the Countess should have ignored the discourtesy and the hostess should have apologized to her guests and allowed the affair to be forgotten. Making an issue of a young person's lack of form seems to indicate that those involved were quite childish, to say the least.

Titled personages who come from abroad to visit in America should, if they are worthy, be accorded the same degree of courtesy which titled Americans expect when traveling abroad. "No titles in America?" Not inherited titles, but we certainly do have titles.

JAMES H. HEATHER

JAMES H. HEATHER, manager of The Furniture Center, 256 South Auburn Street, Grass Valley, and one of the county's leading business men, is a true Cousin Jack. As a matter of fact, when he left Cornwall at the age of 19, his mother told him not to stop in America at all, but to travel straight on until he got to Grass Valley.

Heather made it all right, and like many sturdy Cornish newcomers to Grass Valley, went to work directly in the mines. He started as a mucker in the Empire-Star. When he resigned, after 22 years in the same mine, he had risen to shift boss.

As a young blade about town Heather was a prominent soccer payer. He has his football uniform at home today and says he can still get into it.

He began with the Furniture Center in 1944 as a driver and linoleum layer. At that time the store was owned by Jensen and Thomas. A few months later, C. C. Rogers, the present owner, bought the concern, nd Heather was employed as manager.

He is treasurer of Reliance Hose Company Number Three, Grass Valley Firemen, and belongs to the Redmens Lodge, the Foresters Lodge, and the Rotary Club, for which he is a very active worker on the Boy Scouts Committee. He is a member of the Methodist Church.

Heather resides with his wife, Doris, and their two children at 240 Bennetts Street, Grass Valley. The children, Roberta and John are aged, respectively 13 and 5.

His hobbies include fishing, hunting and "home."

The Furniture Center carries an excellent selection of merchandise chosen from top national lines. Their stock includes: Kroehler Living Room Furniture, Aladdin Lamps, Stromberg-Carlson Radios, O'Keefe and Merritt Ranges, Easy Washing Machines, Gibson Electric Stoves and Refrigerators, Estate Gas Ranges, Armstrong's Linoleum, Bigelow Carpets, Simmons, Beauty-Rest, and Spring-Air Mattresses.

REFREEZING THAWED FOODS

If for some reasno the current supplied your home freezer fails, you can safely refreeze any packages which still have ice in them, says the General Electric Consumers Institute. Refreezing the frozen foods which have thawed completely is always undesirable and sometimes dangerous. Fruits lose flavor and color; other foods (especially meats, fish, poultry and some vegetables) may harbor food spoilage poisons. They can be cooked for immediate use if the temperature in the cabinet has not rises above 50 degrees F.

To The Patrons Of The BRET HARTE DAIRY and PEOPLE of THIS COMMUNITY

There appears to be some organized propaganda to the effect that the Bret Harte Dairy did not whole heartedly endeavor to supply this trading area with milk and dairy products during the past few years, including the period of the war.

The following facts are offered to refute such rumors—

During the war the Bret Harte Dairy was faced with the problem of supplying milk and dairy products to this community under the many War Time restrictions and regulations of both the California State Department of Agriculture and the O.P.A.

In meeting the problem of supplying this community during the war when milk and milk products were in extremely short supply, the Bret Harte Dairy, because of O.P.A. restrictions, and a lack of enough milk to go around, was not able to supply the normal wholesale outlets —the grocery stores of this community—with a sufficient volume of milk to fill the entire demand of the store customers.

During the war the population of this community increased tremendously with the result that milk products were in greater demand than before the war. And with more and more people demanding and needing milk and dairy products, a heavy burden was placed on the dairy industry of this area to try to adequately meet this condition.

During these years the O.P.A. set the price of milk and dairy products. At the same time Federal Food Distributing Agencies through their directives made it mandatory that babies, sick people, hospitals, growing children, and old people receive preference in the distribution of milk and other dairy products. Because of these directives and also because of the natural desire to see that the people who needed the milk would be assured of a supply, the Bret Harte Dairy was forced to curtail its normal wholesale supply of milk—that normally daily distributed to the grocery stores of the community—in order to take care of the minimum necessary requirements of those individuals having great need and preference under Federal directives.

The Bret Harte Dairy regretted that there was not enough milk available during these years to adequately supply both the stores and the babies and others in necessary need of milk. However, all of the milk processed by the Bret Harte Dairy was distributed only in the local trading area.

All through the war years the equipment and the facilities of the Bret Harte Dairy were constantly taxed to capacity to meet the increasing demands for milk. Tires, trucks and other equipment were not available. And in order to conserve on these items all dairy producers and distributors cooperated to make the most of their combined available equipment.

An example of such cooperation is as follows: The Barnegat Ranch is one of the big milk producers of this area. The Golden State Company of Sacramento had a contract with the Barnegat Ranch Dairy during the war and still have a contract for their entire output of milk. Because of the fact that the Bret Harte Dairy had a producer in the immediate vicinity of the Barnegat Ranch Dairy, Bret Harte trucks daily picked up the Barnegat Ranch milk along with that of our own producer, and then delivered the Barnegat Ranch Dairy milk to Golden State trucks at Bear River Bridge, a point on the route of both distributors. This arrangement was one to save the tires and trucks of both organizations and is perhaps one of the causes for the misunderstanding and the erroneous propaganda to the effect that the Bret Harte Dairy was not conserving all possible milk for the local area.

The Bret Harte Dairy wishes to bring out these facts to refute these current and past rumors that this community was not given the best service possible and as great a volume of milk as possible during the war years.

We believe that the Bret Harte Dairy can rightfully be proud of its war record in supplying this trading area with milk and other dairy products.

Kathleen Norris Says:

What Hospitalized Veterans Need

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features

"They let me hold the baby while they did the dishes."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

A FEW weeks ago, in a midwestern city, I was given a lift to my hotel by a charming young matron who apologized for the crumbs and peanut shells that littered the back of her car.

"The boys love them," she explained.

"The boys?"

"Soldiers," she said. "Boys from the hospital. Life cases."

"But—bread and peanuts?"

"Oh, those," she said laughing. "Those are for the ducks and the elephants. They feed them, at the zoo."

That was all I heard then. The rest I got at the hospital itself, from the superintendent of nurses.

"Little Mrs. Brown," she said. "Yes, she is very faithful. There ought to be a hundred like her. But she is the only one.

"She is the only one," the nurse went on, "who comes regularly and takes our boys driving. She takes them where they want to go, to see the sights from the mountain, or out to the zoo and the lake. If they want to see a special show, she takes them there. Christmas Day she and her husband — himself wearing a Purple Heart—had three to dinner; they played pencil games afterward, and the lucky three haven't stopped talking about it yet.

"I don't have to tell you," said nurse Williams, "that the authorities and the Red Cross do everything they can. But that is impersonal, of course. A boy is taken to the dentist, or a block of opera or concert tickets are carefully distributed. Magazines are sent in, Christmas is well-remembered. But all that is impersonal, and you don't know how these boys hunger for personal contacts. Why, Mrs. Brown tells me that sometimes they are all chattering together, like children.

Happier in Hospitals.

"You see, lots of our boys are so maimed or so disfigured that they don't want to go home. The contrast between what they were—young and strong and happy, just a few years ago—and what they are now—blind, lame, painful to look upon—is too much for them. They come back to the hospital on some pretext, another operation, more treatments; they are happier here. But they long for friends, friends who never knew them in the old days, friends who will take them as they are.

"We have one boy here who often is asked to one of the humblest homes of the city for a Sunday dinner. A humble home, yes, but with a mother and father and boys and girls in it. They make him one of them for just a few happy hours every week, he knows they like him. The first time he went he came back breathless. 'They let me hold the baby while they did the dishes,' he said, over and over. Everyone in the hospital knew that these good plain people trusted him, and that the baby wasn't frightened by the poor patched face."

After our talk, Mrs. Williams let me look into a ward. But I couldn't stand that long. It wasn't that the boys were dreadful or frightening, nothing like that. It was that they were so normal, just lonely boys amusing themselves with old magazines, games and the radio. Thin wistful boys, bandaged boys, philosophical boys and embittered boys.

"They gave so much . . ."

SMALL FAVORS

While veterans in government hospitals receive excellent medical care, good food and clothing, they have other needs that no institution can provide. This is a chance to enjoy normal human contracts —trips to the movies and parks, dinners in happy homes. It is up to the people living within reach of these hospitals to do what they can to make the lot of these heroic young men easier, says Miss Norris.

In a recent visit to a midwestern city she met a woman who was doing her part. This young matron goes regularly to the hospital, takes the men out in her car for long drives to parks, zoos, nearby lakes and mountains. But she is the only one that comes, the head nurse told Miss Norris.

Nearly every woman could do something for these men who have lost so much, continues Miss Norris. They appreciate small favors, little pleasures that almost anyone can provide. An invitation to dinner on a holiday, a ticket to a play or concert, a chance to participate in a family gathering, will relieve the monotony of their lives. It is not all one way, either, concludes Miss Norris. There is a rich satisfaction in conferring small favors on these homeless veterans.

They have given more, for us and our safety, than those who fell. They risked their lives for us, and though those lives were not taken, they were as surely destroyed as if they had been. And now we forget them.

Take Care of One or Two.

Near you, there is very probably a hospital for maimed and invalided men. This is not a request that you attempt to amuse the hundreds of them, still in their glorious twenties, who are whiling away the long days and weeks as mere names on charts; their hopes, their futures gone. As hundreds, as a mass, they have good food, care, clothes, everything that organization can do. But as individual men they long for personal contacts, for friendship in some home where their own personalities can find a little expression. Their enthusiasm for even the simplest sort of home life will touch you to the heart. Their gratitude for friendship—which, after all, is one of the priceless and precious things of life—will repay you a thousand times over for every minute you give them.

No, don't attempt to do it for hundreds, do it for two. Do it for one. Ask the head nurse for one who is convalescent, whose term in the ward is nearly up, if you like. Then, if the experiment is not a success, you know he soon will be discharged from the hospital anyway. By that time you'll know a few more, you'll have found the one who needs just what your family can give him, and whom you need.

If you've a vacant chair, let him fill it. While these boys are hospitalized and friendless and lonely that vacant chair at your table and mine is surely an unspoken rebuke.

Strange Lizards Exhibited

Lizards that walk on water and three-toed sloths are the oddest newcomers to the Chicago zoo. The lizards, about two feet long, are basilisk lizards which have a sort of skimming walk as they travel over the water. They live in trees and along the banks of streams in Central America.

Sloths, the "upside-down animals," come in both two-toed and three-toed varieties. But the three-toed ones are the more rare specimens.

Military titles, political titles, scientific titles, titles earned by long and arduous study in branches of research or academic study. Titles? We have ecclesiastical titles which no one refuses to honor, titles held by those who are outstanding in the world of sports and a huge array of strange, often wierd titles bestowed upon the great pooh bahs of our fraternal and secret organizations. Yes, in America, titles are not lacking, so if a little lady with an inherited title contacts us socially or otherwise, she is entitled to her garment of greatness and if we would be courteous, we will say, "how do you do, Countess," and smile graciously as she responds, "how do you do."

I Wonder if Mr. Henry Wallace will continue to be a thorn in the flesh of both grand old parties all through this year 1948. Third parties never win in America, but they sometimes shift the balnce of power and bring about the downfall of favorite candidates. Mr. Wallace knows this and so do the followers of the donkey and the elephant. There will be much braying and trumpeting in the days to come and I predict that the presidential campaign from start to finish, will afford us no dull moments.

Uncle Silas says; "While most of us are worrying about the high cost of living, a small minority of Americans are concerned with the cost of high living."

NOISE OR CARBON—WHICH?

"The silence-seeking motorists carry matters somewhat too far occasionally," states L. G. Evans, General Service Manager for National Automobile Club. "To iron out the last tiny click in the valve gear, they have the closest kind of adjustments made. The effect is designed to induce the formation of carbon as well as to reduce the engine's power output. Silence is all right, but engine experts are convinced that it should not be carried too far."

The Diary of a 49'er

Brush and Rock Creeks. He made the eagle scream."

For some reason Pard did not seem to be very chirrupy and when I asked him what ailed him he said: "Alf, I've been playing it pretty low down on you boys. My name ain't Anderson and I never can wear this watch where I am known."

I nearly fell off the bench, but he kept on talking: "There is nothing wrong, Alf; I am as straight as a shoe string. There were reasons that when I came here made me change my name, but matters are coming out different than I expected and it won't be long before I will be the man I was before I left Syracuse. When the right time comes I will tell you the whole story and you will not be ashamed of your pard."

Then, as usual, when he got to feeling off, he whistled to the dog and they went out into the dark. You could have knocked me down with a feather, but I had sense enough not to follow. It's a puzzle, but I'll bet my pile there is nothing wrong about Pard.

JULY 20, 1851—We formed our river company; eight of us, and we let a contract to a couple of Maine men to whipsaw out twenty thousand feet of lumber at one hundred dollars per thousand. Pard is engineering the scheme and says that about the last of August it will be low water and then we will do some lively work wingdamming the stream. He is sure that the bed of the river will pay big if we can get at it and stay in it long enough to clean up a good sized strip of it. I don't know a thing about it except that it does seem reasonable that with gold all along the banks and in every creek and gulch that runs into it the gold ought to find its way into the trough of the river. That's the way it is along Deer Creek, and we were told by some miners who came down from the North Yuba, which seems to be a branch of our river, that in the fall of '50 they managed to get into it in a half-dozen places and that two or three of the companies cleaned up fortunes. One thing sure, all our old theories about gold don't amount to much. Instead of the deposits petering out, the miners are striking it richer in every direction and in places where we did not think of looking for it a year ago. On Selby Hill there is a deep channel running into the mountain and there is more gold in it than there was on Brush Creek. On the other side of Sugar Loaf, way up on the hill, there is another big streak that seems to run in the same direction as Deer Creek, only it is five hundred feet higher up. Then down at Grass Valley they are taking out chunks of gold from quartz. Since this discovery the miners have got it into their heads that these rocks are the most likely source of the gold and some parties have built a crushing machine which pounds up the rock and leaves the gold free to catch in sluices.
